Why the UE?

The New Media Design programme merges multiple concepts of space in inspiring, unexpected, and expressive ways. You will continually ask how media can create, transform, and reimagine the spaces in which we learn, work, play, connect, party, rest and connect. The answers may take the form in immersive installations, sonic spaces, or live projections, and also virtual worlds, augmented reality experiences, interactive architecture, and beyond.

Through practical and theoretical seminars, individual & group work, close mentorship and independent studio work, you will develop the tools, methodologies, and insights necessary to succeed within creative industries and initiatives. We teach in small learning groups in a friendly and informal atmosphere to help you define your talents and personal signature. We also structure collaborative projects with outside partners to build your ability to work in diverse groupings, with a focus on presentation, documentation, and successful implementation.

Perspectives at the UE

Modern successful designers look outside the box and collaborate with other disciplines. With us, you'll have the unique opportunity to select electives from a wide range of different programmes. This means you'll have the opportunity to add finesse to your creative profile and make a fantastic impression on the job market.

The programme is a project-based degree, perfect for students who have completed undergraduate studies at university level in artistic, design, or media related subject areas. At UE, you'll have the chance to contribute your own personal design skills and background to make something meaningful out of them - whether in communication design, media design, architecture, stage design, design management, or media theory.
